

ACD General Guidelines for Research Ethics

Research ethics govern the standards of conduct for scientific researchers. It is important to adhere to ethical principles in order to protect the dignity, rights and welfare of research participants.

As such, all research involving human beings should be reviewed by research or ethics committee to ensure that the appropriate ethical standards are being upheld.

American College of Dubai encourages and supports the research and scholarly activities of its faculty. ACD ensures that all faculties are conducting their research matching ethical norms and standards. ACD ensures that all research projects shall be implemented by criteria as:

- Laws and Regulation
- Confidentiality
- Institutional Responsibility
- Availability of results
- Global Responsibility

ACD expects and ensures that all research activities undertaken by faculty involving human participation or personal data are undertaken in a way that safeguards the dignity, rights, health, safety, and privacy of those involved.
